

Our forest,
our home.

By:

Hunter Nueku

In the rainforest, in the underbrush of the trees, lived creatures unlike you and me. Two little friends very different from each other, one a Pygmy Marmoset, Prince, one a squirrel, Wyatt, who act just like brothers.

While they were playing along they heard a big smack, it scared them even worse when they heard another wack.

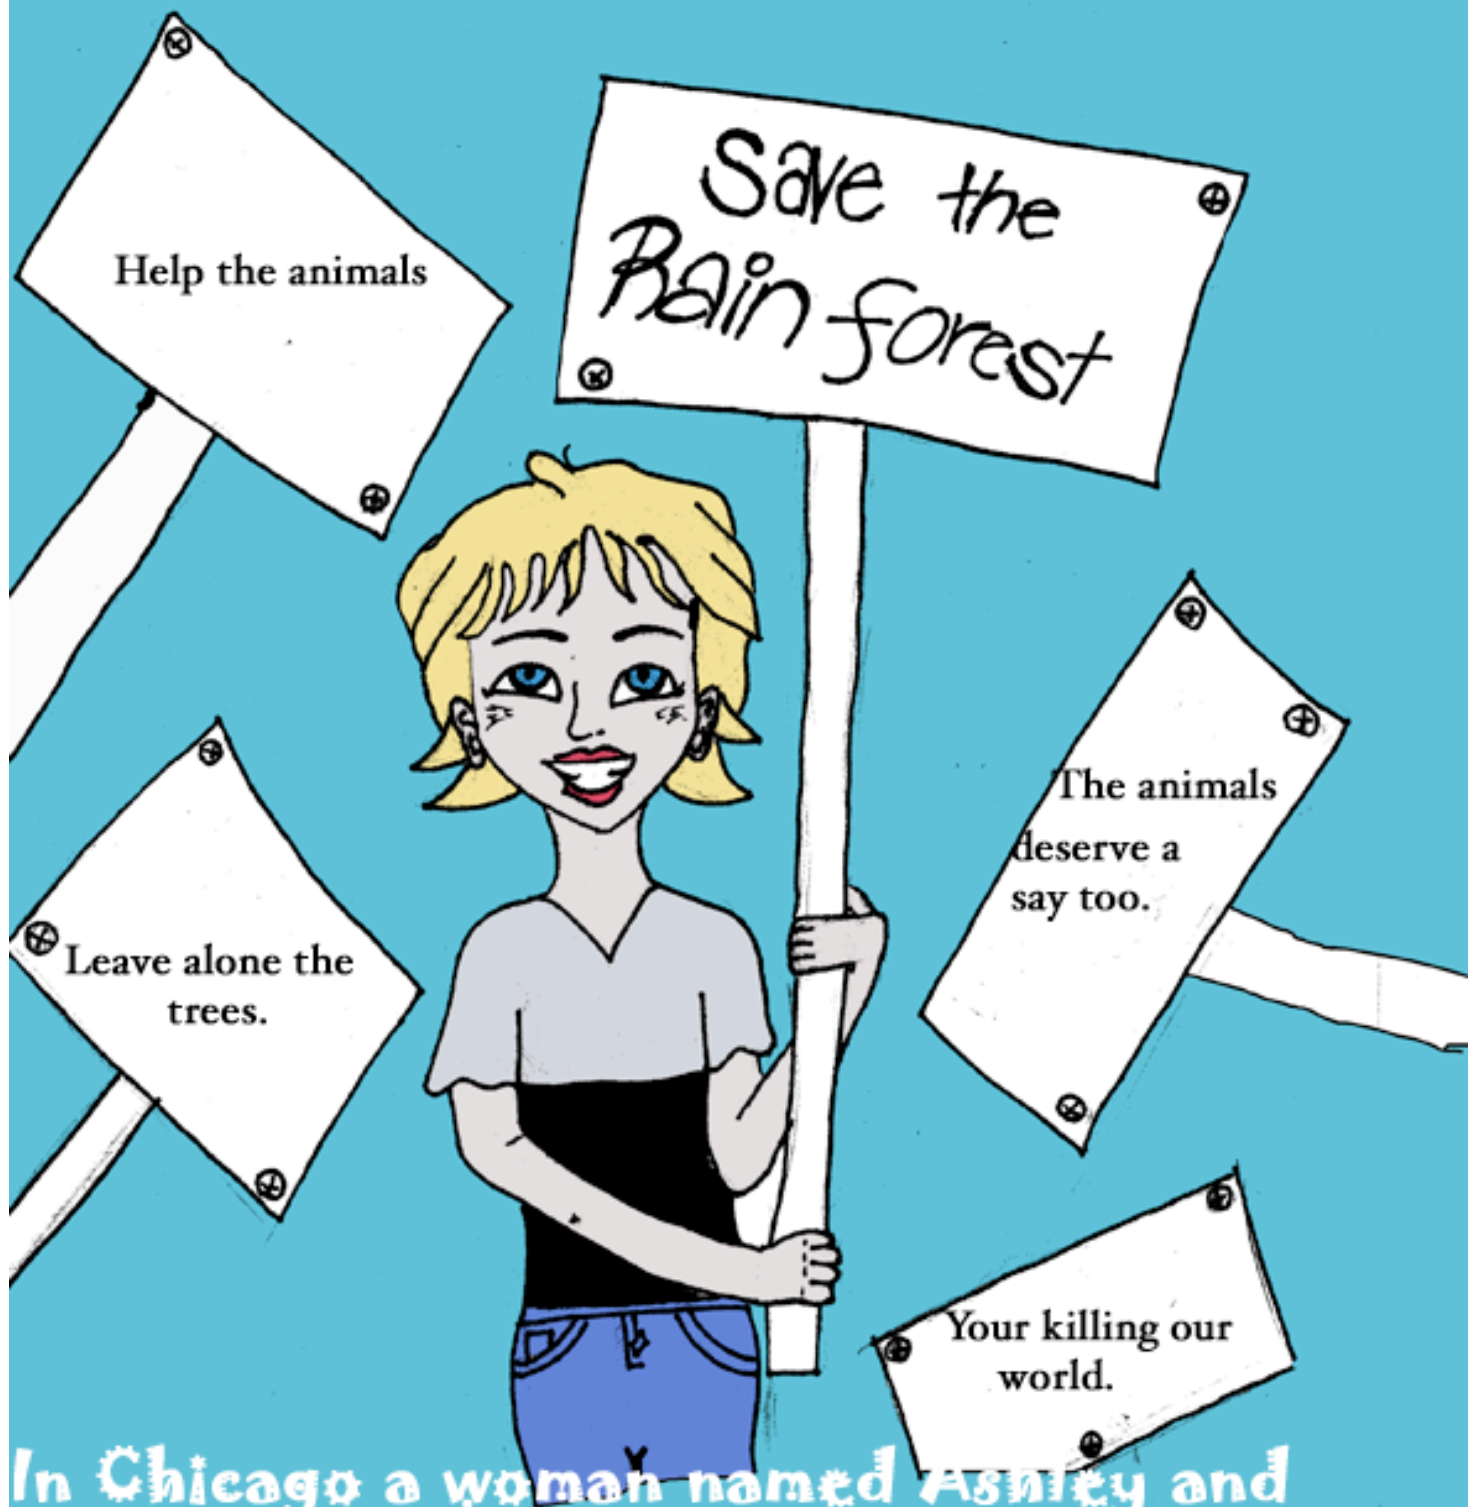

They went to tell their parents
when they saw what fell down.
It was a tree, now just lying on the ground.

Their parents said, "The beavers are building a new dam." But more days passed and trees were still going, "bam!"

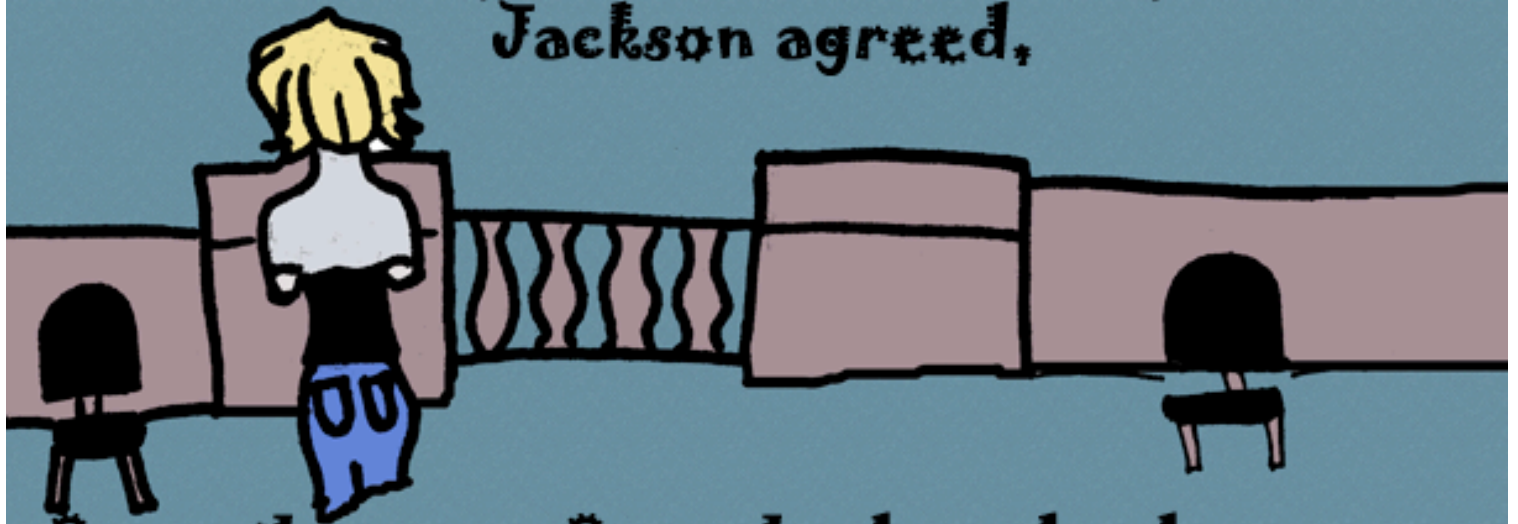

Strange large creatures were being seen, with big scary weapons that would hurt the scene. The names of these creatures were Frank & Joe one who cuts and one who tows.

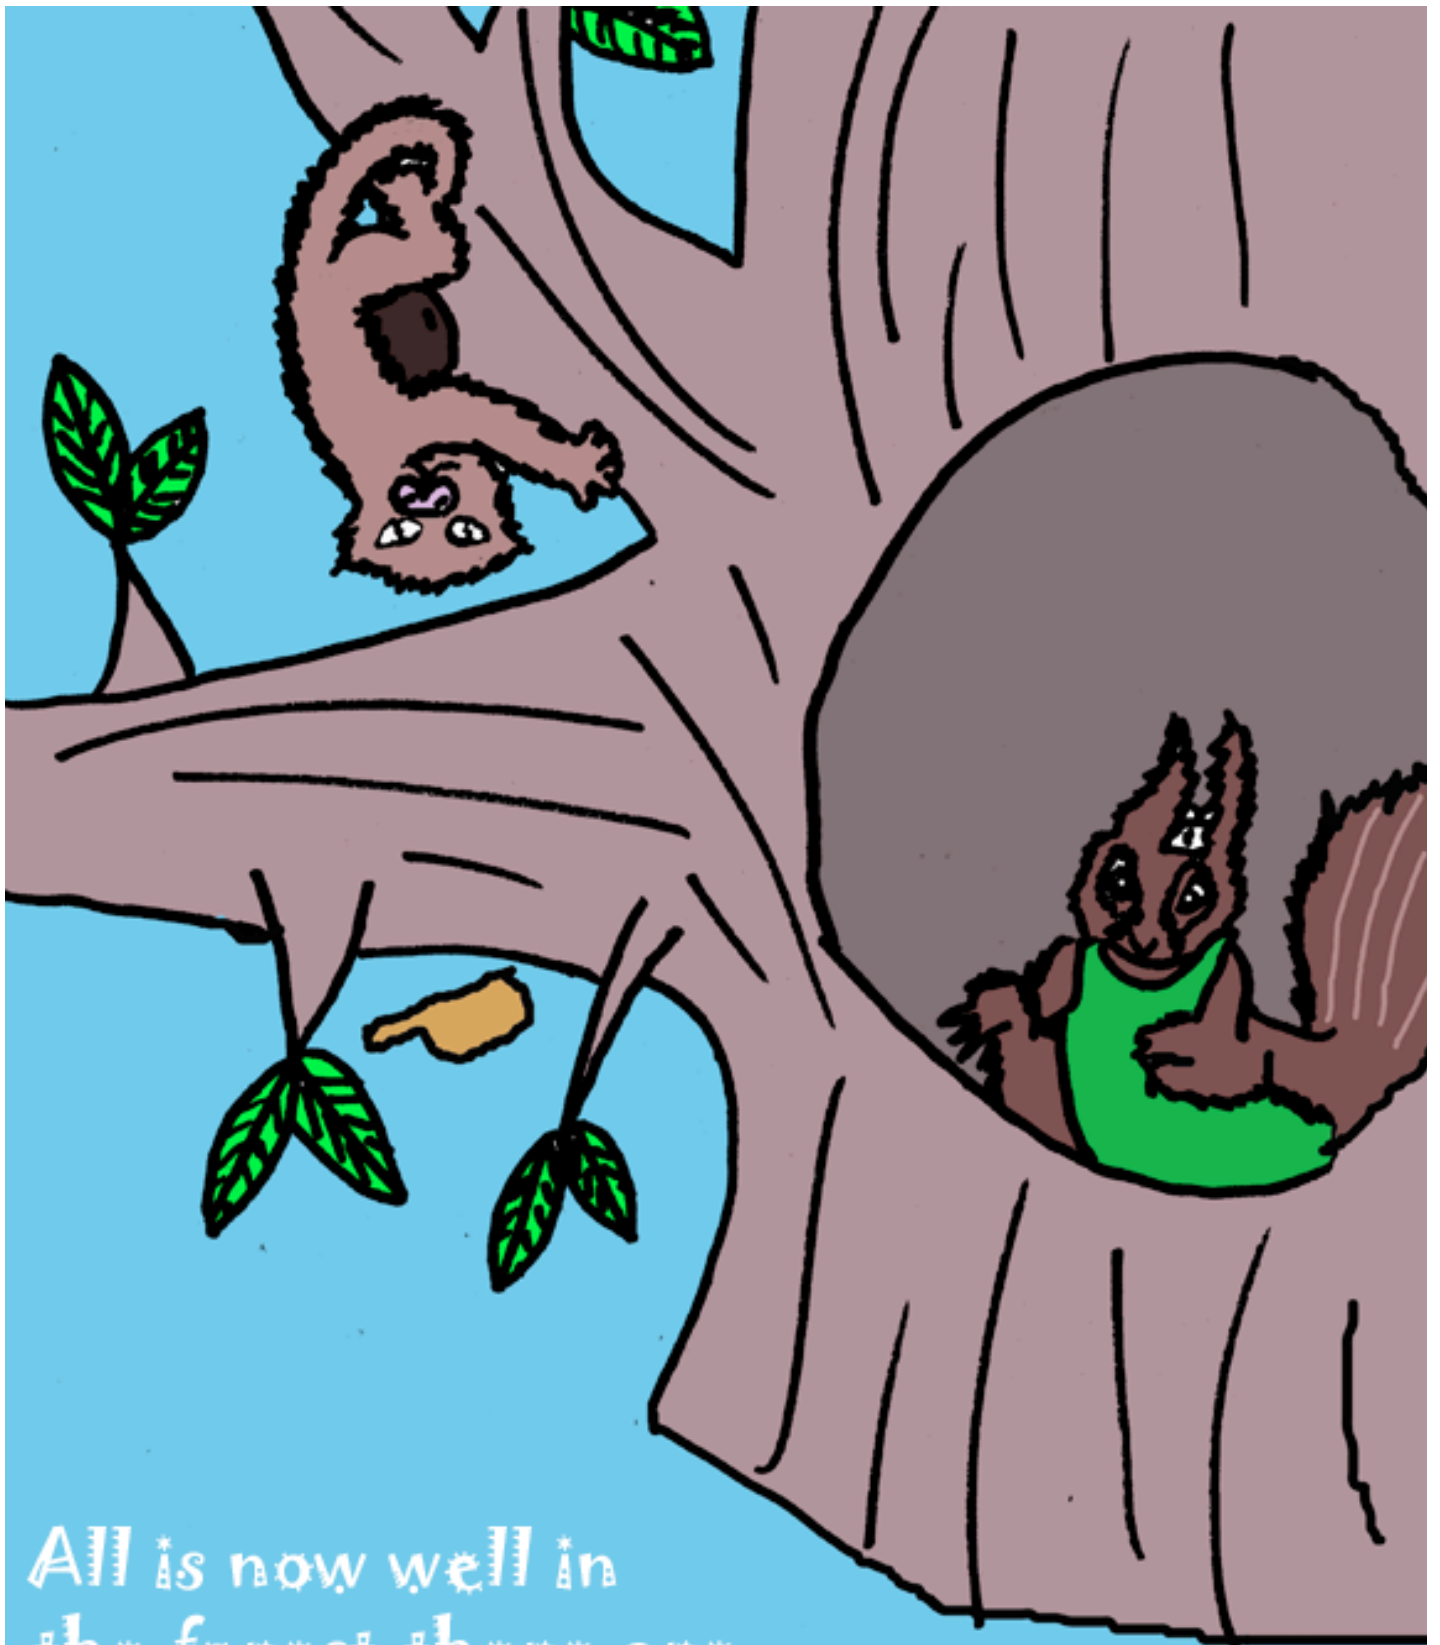

In Chicago a woman named Ashley and her group from "Save the rainforest" saw the damage and took notice for the animals in the forest. Off to Washington the group went to challenge the council members, to keep the trees from going timber.

Council men Coil and Council woman Jackson agreed,

Council woman Crayola thought there was too many laws on the environment, and the animals had too much greed. The group stated their case and almost got a fine, but eventually won over her vote and changed the law, keeping the trees here for a long time.

All is now well in the forest, there are no more cutting of trees. Prince and Wyatt are now playing freely.